Acts of Cruelty Toward Chinese Laborers is Forcing Russian Alliance

CLAIMS BERKELEY EDUCATOR

Says British Authorities Aggravated Trouble by Use of Hindu Police

By GEORGE W. GRAYDON.

(By Universal Service)

BERKELEY, June 12.—"Repeated acts of cruelty toward Chinese laborers by the Japanese industrial owners in driving the Chinese people toward a defensive alliance with the Russians," according to Dr. N. C. Tang, associate professor of Chinese at the University of California. Dr. Tang is in close contact with the student movement of China, which he says has championed the cause of the Chinese laboring classes.

"Chinese workers in a Japanese cotton mill at Shanghai voted to strike when their demands for a cut in the working day from fifteen hours to eight and a raise of pay from fifty cents a day to one dollar were refused by the Japanese owners," says Dr. Tang.

"The cruelty of Japanese bosses who beat little children to keep them awake and threatened Chinese women when they fell exhausted at the looms, aroused the sympathy of the students," explains Dr. Tang. When the strikers staged a parade the day after leaving the Japanese plants, the students joined them.

BRITISH ALSO BLAMED

Dr. Tang blames the British authorities for the aggravation of the present trouble in China. "Hindu police were ordered by the authorities of the British concession to prevent this peaceful demonstration which they did by cruelly killing four strikers and arresting many students."

Dr. Tang explains that this incident has aroused all China and will lead to a demand that the Chinese Government abrogate the treaties with the foreign powers that give them power to punish Chinese citizens for the infraction of the laws of a foreign power.

"Japan was clever," says Dr. Tang, "although her nationals were the cause of the original trouble, her consular officials kept quiet and allowed the British officials to assume (Continued on Page 5)

ASK SPECIAL PERMIT TO WED

(By Universal Service)

ROME, June 12.—Announcement was made at the Vatican today that Pope Pius XI had been requested to issue a special dispensation for the marriage of Miss Helen Mackay, daughter of Clarence Mackay, president of the Postal Telegraph Company, to Irving Berlin, the song writer.

The request was supported by Cardinal Hayes of New York. Although the Holy Office archives were closed today because of a holiday, one of the dignitaries connected with it said he saw the request and added the information that Cardinal Hayes had approved it.

It was explained that dispensations of this character are very difficult to obtain and are only granted when they are strongly supported and when the church has been assured that the children of the union will be reared as Catholics, regardless of what the father's religion may be. In case where a dispensation has been granted no religious ceremony is performed in the usual way. The husband and wife are required, however, to go before a priest in witness that they have gone through a civil marriage ceremony.

Treasury Maps New Tax Plans

(By Universal Service)

WASHINGTON, June 12.—The Treasury Department has worked out the basis of a new tax plan which will be submitted to Congress, providing for a cut in the maximum surtax from the present 40 to 20 per cent. It will also mean a change in the law so that surtaxes would start at 1 per cent of $12,000 or $13,000 instead of $6,000. It would provide for the elimination of taxes on inheritances and large gifts. Another provision will be the complete rewriting of the section relating to deductions by business corporations for losses by depreciation, depletion, etc.

Richmond Air Congress Also to Be Big Attraction on June 27 and 28 For Guests

The Veterans of Foreign Wars encampment in Richmond on June 25, 26, and 27, will be one of the most elaborate celebrations ever staged in this city, according to reports of the committee in charge, and the president of the local organization has been requested for the three-day convention.

The only problem that confronts the committee at present is the housing proposition. Letters have been received from numerous cities in this state and Nevada to the effect that delegations are coming with from 25 to 50 strong. A request has been issued that any resident of Richmond who has an extra room or rooms that might house a delegate or visitor put the same at the service of the committee for the time of the encampment.

It is desired to keep all visitors to Richmond in this city during the entire three days, but the lack of rooms is causing considerable consternation. Ralph Wood, chairman of the encampment committee, is in charge of the rooms and it would be greatly appreciated if room owners would communicate with him at (Continued on Page 8)

HIGHWAY NEEDS TO BE SURVEYED

The California State Automobile Association yesterday announced the appointment of a committee of five to make a survey of the present State highway situation for the purpose of considering an initiative measure to finance a constructive road construction program.

The committee is asked to report a plan at the July meeting of the board of directors of the organization. The committee named includes the following directors: W. T. Seaton, president; Senator Arthur H. Broderick, chairman of the Legislative committee; and author of the gasoline tax measure vetoed by Governor Richardson; H. J. Brunner, chairman of the good roads committee; Perry E. Toans, and John R. Graham.

This move of the association is the first organized step taken toward finding a solution for California's State highway problem. In a message announcing official death of Senator Broderick's gasoline bill, Governor Richardson suggested that the California State Automobile Association and the Automobile Club of Southern California "will be able to get together on a program for the benefit of the whole State."

GRASS VALLEY MINER MAY BE TOMBED ALIVE

Cave-In at 800 Foot Level Entombs Worker in Baltic Tunnel of Alta Mine

MAY BE REACHED TODAY

While Rescue Crews Rush Work Victim's Wife and Children Watch Tunnel

(By Universal Service)

SACRAMENTO, June 12.—With Robert Hill, 35, a Grass Valley miner, entombed in a chamber of rock in the Baltic tunnel of the Alta Combination Mine, 800 feet from the surface of the earth, the grim, epic drama of the Argonaut mine disaster is being re-enacted on a smaller scale here tonight as tired rescue crews battle with caved-in rock and stone which have held Hill a prisoner for more than twenty-four hours.

The rescue workers, toiling in the tunnel where the original cave-in is estimated at fifty feet, had removed sixteen feet of loose stone and debris tonight. A constant flow of material from the side walls and the necessity of retimbering as they go to prevent further disaster, however, makes progress of the workers slow.

Firm belief that Hill was not killed in the cave-in which occurred just as the crews were changing shifts at 3:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon and that he awaits the rescuers somewhere in the 1,500 foot chamber of solid rock beyond the tunnel obstruction was expressed tonight by H. L. Ostrander, superintendent of the mine, and Robert Bedford, superintendent of the famous North Star Mine, now here, who is in charge of the rescue work. Effort to communicate with Hill by tapping the rock walls which (Continued on Page 5)

THE CREDIT OF LABOR

There has been a convention in Montreal of the Boot and Shoe Workers' union and the members have very sensibly declined to have their legs pulled. A resolution was offered that in case of war the 50,000 members of the union cease work. The resolution being put to the assembly, the assembly threw it out for the shady piece of work that it was. In the Associated Press report the reason given was that such a resolution was too "radical," but the necessary amenities of parliamentary action do not hide the fact that American labor was asked to hold itself ready to harnessing the nation, to betray its manhood and to help destroy the United States.

This maneuver is a familiar one. It is sketched in pacifist schemes, it is uttered from soap boxes, it has a more imposing place in speeches and writing of those admitted into the society of honorable men. The workers in Europe, said some who took their own wishes for principles, would never permit war in 1914. At the first hot breath of it, they would down tools and by a universal abstention do what a hundred armies could not effect. All which having been comfortably established, the workers proceeded to turn to and fight heartily.

But an idea so fascinating and so convenient as this could never be burked by a little discouragement. Its last recorded appearance has been in Montreal, as we have shown, and was put forward with precisely the same motives that have always accompanied it. Such things are done for two purposes; to embarrass the defense forces of the United States immediately and in the future to parade American labor as the ally of the elements in Europe that would turn the world back into the paths of the Dark Ages. If the men who have a soft place in their heart for the third international and its works could only commit American labor, their red cup would be full and running over. It was the most natural thing for them to try the game once more, for the picture of no boots for American armies was lovely in their eyes. An army marches on its belly, but it also uses its feet a good deal and these must be shod. The strategy was at once apparent; no shoe leather for the "militarists," no "kicks" for tyrannous doughboys with silly ideas about the flag and the U. S. A., no more marches and countermarches against the angels of tranquility. The things was put up to the Shoe Workers' union; they were asked nothing more than to take part in a treasonable conspiracy against the land that nourishes their wives and children and themselves. To their credit they refused.—Boston Transcript.

WE'RE NOT SO YOUNG

Dr. Valeria Parker of Washington, speaking at the concluding meeting of the International Council of Women, declared that the United States as "a young member of the family of nations," displayed "all the impulsiveness and selfishness of youth." The lady betrayed before foreign delegates strang unfamiliarity with the comparative age of the United States. Our nation is not one of the younger, but one of the very oldest members of the family of nations. Our national flag is the oldest in Christendom. We are older than united Italy or united Germany. We are the oldest of the many nations of this hemisphere. The sixteen new European nations created as the result of the World war, the Portuguese, French and Russian republics are all infants in arms as compared with Uncle Sam. True the people of these nations have long lived under some government, but the American colonies had two hundred and fifty years of existence before the Revolutionary war, with a grater degree of self government than prevailed in most of Europe during the same period. What European nation has more of the marks of maturity in its national thinking than has the United States—which are less impulsive or more unselfish?

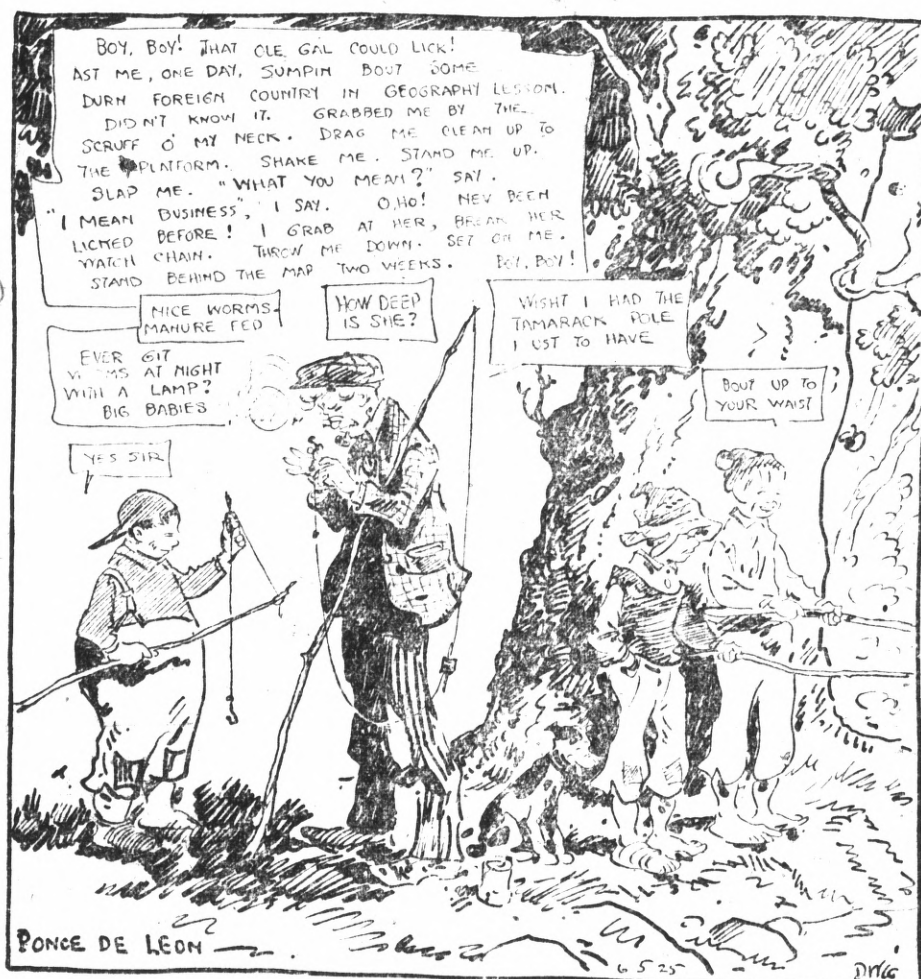

The French army in Africa evidently would not relish the idea of being bound in Morocco.

U. S. NOT AT FAULT

Major General John F. O'Ryan of New York, in a speech before the States the greatest menace to world peace. It was not the United States that disturbed the peace of the world in 1924. Since the close of the World war the United States has had nothing to do with staging the score of big and little wars that have occurred in Europe. The best contribution any citizen can make to neighborhood peace is to attend to his own business and keep his nose out of other people's. It is as good a peace program for a nation as for an individual. If Europe regards the United States as a menace to world peace it is overlooking a good many things much nearer home.

Huge Designs and Vivid Colors Mark Printed Chiffons That Fashion Favors.

A FEW years hence we may look back on the fashions of this year 1925, and wonder how we ever wore such enormous and such vivid printed crepes and silks. It will seem then as if we must have been very childish. But in the fashion cycle of any period there is something that succeeding periods cannot understand. WISE AND OTHERWISE By MARY MARSHALL

A BAG FOR EVERY TRECK

ONE clever woman makes her own envelope bags, and so manages to have a bag to match or to go with every street or afternoon frock in her wardrobe. Heavymoire silk is a good selection, and this can be bought to match the predominant tone of the frock. Almost any firm, heavy silk fabric may be used. Glazed chintz is attractive for bags to go with wash frocks.

If you decide to make an envelope bag the way to go about it is to buy a large envelope, of the shape and size you want, at the stationery store. Unfold this, so that you can lay it flat for a pattern. This may require a little steaming. Now cut the material and some suitable lining exactly the shape of the envelope pattern, plus a half inch all around for turning in. Mark lightly with chalk or pencil around the edge of the pattern on the inside and then turn in material on this mark. Do the same for the lining.

One way of proceeding now is to paste the lining and the material very lightly where it is turned. This should then be allowed to dry under weight of several books. The lining and outside portion should then be put together. This may be done with the paste if the material is heavy enough. It should be done very neatly and carefully along the edges. If you do not like to use paste then the lining and outer portion must be joined by very fine blind stitches. This done the square should be pressed or smoothed under weights, and then turned in exactly the lines taken by the envelope. By means of paste or blind stitches the lower flap of the envelope should be attached to the side laps. The upper flap

WHO'S WHO AND WHAT'S HAPPENED

SALLY and TOM PORTER have separated, quarreling because Sally has insisted on returning to her work as a public stenographer after their marriage. The fact that she did so in order to pay their bills when he lost his job makes no difference to Tom.

SALLY finds other men ready to help her forget Tom, but she cannot put him out of her heart. At last she realizes that her life will always be incomplete without him, and when a letter comes from his sister, she decides to make one more effort to straighten out the tangle between them.

TODAY'S INSTALLMENT

XLIV—THE FIGHT BEGINS

SALLY started out bravely the next morning, determined that she would get some typing to do at home, then find a home in which to live, and then see her husband and try to straighten out the difficulties that separated them.

She was an attractive little thing, in her dark blue suit and dark hair, and she had a little shop where a sale was advertised by big window signs, and bought a white collar and set, feeling that it added enough to her appearance to justify the dollar she spent on it.

"I can't do many things like that," she told herself, "but it means a lot to feel that you look nice when you're looking for work."

She went to the office of a public stenographer whom she had known in the days when she was working at the hotel.

"I want some work to do at home—typing," she told Mrs. Eaton, the woman who had the office. "Won't you let me have anything extra that comes to you that you can't handle? I'll get it out in a hurry, work nights any time, on a rush job."

"Well, I don't know—I rarely have anything that my two girls and I can't manage," Mrs. Eaton answered rather discouragingly. "You look pretty well? Been away? You got married, didn't you?"

Sally sensed the other woman's jealousy in her tone, she smiled, the cheerful little smile that was one of her greatest charms.

"Yes, I've been away, working hard, and yes, I got married, but I've got to support myself," she replied.

"Oh! One more marriage that didn't take?" Mrs. Eaton was more cordial. Sally resented the woman's "misery-loves-company" attitude. But she gave no hint of her own feelings; she had worked too long in a world that is not overkind to girls who support themselves to think that she could afford the luxury of resentment.

"Well, it didn't exactly take," she answered. "And I've been most awfully grateful to you if you can help me." "I'll do what I can," Mrs. Eaton told her, more encouragingly than she had spoken before. "We get manuscripts of books and things like that once in a while, and it really doesn't pay me to have them done here. What's your address?"

Sally gave her the name of the cheap little hotel where she was staying, and went away.

To another office, then to another—up through huge skyscrapers in elevators full of busy-looking people, people who all had jobs, she told herself, wistfully into offices where other girls were working. She left her name at several of them, and also at two employment agencies in the hope that somebody might want a secretary who would work at home.

She went back to her hotel room, to dine on crackers and milk that she had smuggled in in her handbag, to wash out her underwear and work as a public stenographer after their marriage, and then sit by the window, a greatly old rocking chair and wonder where Tom was.

Was he with that other girl, that girl whose sister had a big house in a suburb, where she and Tom could sit on a comfortable front porch and listen to the crickets and smell the flowers blooming in a garden? What would he be doing to that other girl, if they were sitting there?

She let that be loved her, perhaps. Telling her about Sally, his wife—only somehow, we couldn't make a go of it. She wanted to spend so much money—wanted a lot of things I couldn't buy. After we were married she went on working, and of course we couldn't have a real home."

"He hasn't any right to tell her that!" Sally exclaimed across, just as if she really knew that Tom really was telling that other girl about her. "I did give up my job when we were married, and it was a good job, too. I was willing to stay home only when he was out of work we had to have money, and there wasn't anything else for me to do."

"Any work today?"

but go back and pound a typewriter again!"

For the thousandth time she wondered how they would have made out if she hadn't gone back to work. Tom would have had just had to support them, somehow. They'd have got along, of course—people did. They'd have run up terrible bills, but those would have been paid by now—and she and Tom would have had each other.

In that moment Sally, lonely and tired and wretched, was ready to give in under the weight of trouble that bore down on her slender shoulders. After all, what could she do? Tom had really turned from her to that other girl who had come up to his sister's with him? She had always come back to her belief in Tom's love for her—maybe she'd been wrong!

Well, I'm going to find out whether I'm wrong or not," she announced at last, to the grimy, stained walls of the little hotel bedroom. "I'll make this one big effort, and then I'll lose out."

She didn't finish that sentence. She went to the office again the next day, and the next. "Any work today?" she would ask, as cheerfully as if it didn't really matter. She got a few things to do, a manuscript to copy, a batch of form letters that Mrs. Eaton didn't care about doing.

Sally worked conscientiously as if she hadn't another interest in the world but those letters. But whenever she stopped for a moment to rest her arms and back, the thought of Tom bobbed up in her mind. Did he still love her? When would she see him again?

Murmurs of "The Family's" advent reached Leo's ears and passed over them. She failed to appreciate the excitement of her maid, her housekeeper, Miss Blake and Miss Dunne. Nor did she spend her days, with Mrs. Bolten, Mrs. Kerry and other matrons, in a search for new clothes of the latest London "cut." Irreverently alluding to the name as "a jaw-twister," she retired from competition to the seclusion of the library. She was seated on the floor, surrounded by books, when Pomfrey, bristled with impatience, almost holy of voice, entered the room the day after the August Arrival.

"Lady Bottreux-Barrington, ma'am," he said, a hushed expression in his eyes.

Leo looked up a little dazedly from her reading.

"Oh? Where?"

"In the lounge, ma'am. Pomfrey was too up to date for drawing-rooms."

Leo rose, closing her book reluctantly, and went to the "lounge."

At the door she gave a little sigh of anticipated boredom. But this moved into a shriek, which was echoed by another, and she hurried herself across the room.

"Barley! It's never you!"

"Leo! You old rotter! I've run you to earth at last!"

Leo endured and returned the somewhat violent embrace. Then, freeing herself from the elder woman's capacious arms, she looked into her plain jolly face with a mystified laugh. "I entered the room prepared to be bored stiff," she owned frankly.

"I thought so. You always hid your feelings badly."

"But—Barley—you humbug! You owned a castle and a title and—the devil knows what!"

"Two kiddies, four cats and sundry dogs—oh, yes, and a husband, I couldn't bring them all into the Army. It's not done by motor-drivers, is it? So I shed the lot of them."

"Mrs. Barrington—supposed to live somewhere in the Colonies—but rather vague, and always shabby—seldom ever clean. Oh, you lying old duck!"

Leo kissed her again. "Let's talk every blessed thing over, Barley. The blessedness of being able to talk!"

She stopped rather abruptly. "Barley," after a quick look at her face, glanced round the huge room. "I say, Leo, what magnificence! Have you married for money, you little beast? And why? When? Where?"

"Come to my own cubby-hole; it's cozy. Love, my dear, not money! You still have a vile mind, I see."

She led the way, laughing, to her sitting-room and rang for tea.

Under cover of the ensuing fire of reminiscences, Lady Bottreux-Barrington watched the girl's face shrewdly. Not until they had nearly finished tea did Leo trouble to discover the facts leading to this meeting.

"How did you know I was met?" she exclaimed suddenly in her usual graphic phraseology.

"Val told me."

—what d'you mean—what has he said?"

"Oh, scarcely a word. That's it; it's what he hasn't said. You were such splendid pals in the old days. I admired you both! Your friendship was—a beautiful thing—a rare thing."

Leo shaded her eyes. "It was," she murmured.

"Then—?" The other woman looked at her questioning.

Leo merely told her you were married. He said you never wrote to him—now. He showed me a newspaper, several months old, with the announcement. . . . Of course I had no idea you lived here, until I heard by accident this morning."

"Did Val?"—Leo twisted her fingers together in her lap—"was he—did he seem—surprised?"

"Surprised?"—He—my dear—"

She broke off, undecided what to say. Leo's dumbly beseeching gaze urged her on, perhaps unwisely. "I looked once into his eyes and—dared not look again."

Her words went into silence. She leaned forward. "Leo—did that friendship prove—"

Don't bother to tell me. . . . But—poor Val! Poor dear old Val! . . . He is so sensitive."

Leo's face was again hidden by her hand. "It seemed best—not to write," she muttered huskily.

"It seems to me—downright cruelly. But, of course, I don't know all the facts. . . . Well, changing the subject in her abrupt fashion, "tell me all your present news. Is this your husband?"

She leaned forward again and took a photograph from a little table, on which it stood alone. "Bring him over to dinner tomorrow, will you? We are only down for a week, with quite a musical crowd."

She was looking critically at the photograph, and smiled across it at Leo. "A man with a mouth like that ought to manage even you! But I really can't, even now, contemplate you—married. Nearly fainting, when I heard!"

"That's the trouble, Barley."

"What? And is there trouble?"

"No. But I can't behave marriedly, if you understand? I don't seem to go down—with the Merleys and others about here."

Lady Bottreux-Barrington got up, with one of her big hearty laughs.

"For the lord's sake don't try! If you once 'go down' here you will never rise again. Now I must go. See you tomorrow, old thing. . . . Come to the door with me; your butler's severity scares me to death."

Pomfrey's eyes nearly fell from their sockets when he beheld his young mistress throw a careless arm round the Great Lady's titled neck and kiss her affectionately.

He took the news to the back regions, where it formed the topic of conversation that night, causing Ross to reconsider her oft-repeated threat to leave and "better her self."

It percolated to the village next morning, and the butcher's boy decided to stop whistling and to touch his forelock to the owners of The Towers—a very special honor nowadays. By evening it had become the staple diet at every Marble Halled dinner and Geographical Supper-table in the parish.

People began "to sit up."

CHAPTER XI

Harry's pleasure over this visit caused Leo a variety of feelings. Surprise merged into amusement, became tinged with scorn, turned to irritation. It was, she felt, snobbish; therefore detestable. Yet Harry, the source of this snobbish, remained to her most lovable. Irritated though she might be by many skinks in his character, others never lost their charm. Leo had begun to study the art, not only of adjustment, but of transposition. Again and again, resolutely placing herself in his position, she tried to see matters from his point of view. But Harry suffered from the curse as well as the blessing of success gained throughout life by his own hand. Grappling with materialistic realities from childhood, he failed to consider other and deeper realities.

Hating herself, she nevertheless watched Harry critically when they dined at Bottreux Castle next day. In his eyes shone the old pride and admiration which had been missing of late; but to her he seemed just a little far-off tonight. The peculiar feeling of homesickness, often present nowadays, vanished. She felt like one within sight, at least, of home lamps. And the nearer these came, the farther off seemed Harry. Quietly self-possessed as usual, he gave no hint of the delight caused by this invitation. He appeared, too, perfectly at ease in his surroundings. Knowing now of the jarring little rocks below the calm surface, Leo marveled. After all, they were only tiny crags, she reflected—not deep cavernous cliffs.

Leo's teaspoon dropped into her saucer, then rolled over and fell to the floor.

Leo's teaspoon dropped into her saucer, then rolled over and fell to the floor. "Why—where—have you seen Val?" she asked, stooping to pick it up.

"In Cape Town."

"Oh! Yes, yes—of course. And—for some reason her voice wavered—"how was—is—Val?"

Her guest munched hot tea-cakes, gazing into the fire, her brows drawn down. Presently she gave a careless shrug.

"Singing divinely. Thin as a rake." With disconcerting abruptness she turned piercing dark eyes upon Leo. "What devil's game have you been playing with old Val?"

Leo's cheeks turned scarlet. "I with a little quivering laugh. This unexpected tenderness coming so close upon that passionate longing for another, seemed incongruous. With the suddenness of its appearance, however, the incongruity vanished. Quite a different part peeped Val to the part of her which needed Harry.

Harry relaxed against him, with the same cry she had uttered once before.

"Harry, we must never—let go."

He kissed her and drew her close. "But you haven't told me what caused the tears?"

"Oh, nothing. Nothing. . . . Merely—the music. . . . Seeing an old friend—"

She brushed the matter hastily aside. In Harry's arms all the homesickness had disappeared. "And Sir George is having a car to take back—"

"He's coming to the works tomorrow." At once Harry became the keen man of business again, childishly proud, greatly simple. With music haunting every fiber of her being, she left her hand clasped in his, and listened to his eager expectations during the rest of the drive. . . .

After this, the stratum of The Towers could soar no further; it was established upon dizzy heights. The careful people who had not honored it with invitations, quickly did so. Those who had not even called, almost ran up the drive. What they had missed this week through short-sightedness was positively galling. But who could have known? Mrs. Wallis never gave a hint that she knew the Bottreux-Barringtons. Newcomers should really post a list of their acquaintances on their gates, stating rank, degree of intimacy, etc., etc. . . .

the burden with the result that a spirit of hate against the English has increased tremendously throughout China.

MOVE AGAINST JAPS.

Dr. Tang insisted that the present agitation is not a movement against all foreigners but is directed against the exploitation of the Chinese people by the Japanese and the continuance of the rights conferred by treaty on foreign powers.

"The Chinese people are no longer willing to surrender domestic governmental power to the nationals of western nations," he says.

"Whether sincere or not the Russian offer to deal with the Chinese government on terms of equality and mutual advantage has won the hearts of the Chinese people and especially the students with the result that a war for the control of Asia between the Chinese and Russians on one side and the Japanese on the other is a prospect of the immediate future."

Dr. Tang claims that there is no antagonism against the United States in China.

FRIENDSHIP FOR U. S.

"The return of the boxer indemnity by the United States that has made it possible for hundreds of Chinese

He explained the firing into the American concession by student snipers as a unavoidable. "The American concession and the British adjoin one another. The students at that distance could not distinguish between the two."

Dr. Tang deplored the clash between the students and the volunteer guards of the concessions as a piece of hot headness on the part of the students.

"I am sorry that the students did not avoid conflict with the foreigners who were not implicated in the original trouble. The Japanese should alone have felt the anger of the Chinese and then the British, who without cause interfered on behalf of the Japanese."

"I don't know what will happen next. All China is a seething mass of discontent which the Russian Communists are taking advantage of in order to bring about an alliance between the two peoples. There is every prospect of them accomplishing this desire if the white nations are foolish enough to support the Japanese in this controversy." He concluded.

Trusts Win From Tailors In Twilight Game

SCHNEIDERS SHUT OUT BY 3 TO 0 SCORE

Three widely scattered runs were the only three made in the Richmond Twilight League ball game at First street last night in which the Mercantile Trust aggregation maintained their hold on first place by playing a shutout game with the Schneider Tailors. The final score was 3 to 0 in favor of the Trusts.

This encounter was witnessed by one of the largest groups of fans yet to be seen at a game in this league this season and it was generally agreed that the game was a real ball game from start to finish.

The speedy Hansen was a quaffer of a second too late on one of his speedy trips about the paths. In the fifth inning he eluded what for him is usually a two bagger in deep center. He was caught when he tried to stretch it into a triple. It was a very close race, but nevertheless the runner was undoubtedly out. His long drive scored one of the runs, however.

The game was truly a pitchers battle. McCarron, was in the box for the Mercantile and pitched a sterling game throughout, allowing but three hits, and whiffing ten batters. He passed two. In the seventh inning when the Tailors appeared before him with set and determined faces, McCarron forced them to return to the bench in one two three order. Kamb, of the losers also pitched a fair game, but the few hits that he did allow came at the most opportune times so the three runs were secured.

Water Carnival Program Sunday At Neptune Beach

An athletic water carnival is announced for Sunday at Neptune Beach, Alameda. The program will be staged in "The Undersea Playground," the great shallow lagoon completed this season. The pool will be the scene of a large rowing, canoe, fishing and canoe races, boxing on a raft and a scull race in the water.

The aquatic divers will have a swim to the lagoon, a what is believed to be the first in the city. Some events played in the water. Trusts own events and a list of other events usually pulled off on land will be staged in "The Undersea Playground."

Private dressing rooms installed in the big bathhouse are proving popular with bathers. The rooms are neatly furnished and are furnished with racks that hang off the water so that the bather may dress in privacy and comfort.

The present-day water sports will be staged from the pool of the Neptune recreation pier. The bathers are furnishing the thrill of automobile speed on the water to the holiday crowds at the beach. On week days they are available to parties as cruises on the bay and river.

"The Merry-Go-Round," a new attraction is installed near the recreation pier and will be ready for the Sunday crowds. Sunday, June 21, is Master and Journeyman Barber's day at Neptune Beach. On Saturday, June 20, twenty-five thousand pieces of "Old Henry" will be given away free at the beach.

Park Lot Deeds Received Here

John A. Miller, chairman of the park and playground commission, yesterday received the deed to one of three pieces of property necessary for the South Richmond playground. The property is lots 7 and 8, in Nystrom addition and were secured from Frederick O. Lloyd of Westwood, Calif.

City Attorney D. J. Hall completed the negotiations for the deed, and it is expected that the other property will be acquired shortly.

Gray had just won his eighth game and had lost none when the accident happened. The right-handed twirler had been a big factor in putting the Athletics in the lead for the pennant.

Modern Woodmen Baseball Team Plan New Suits

In a very short time the baseball team of Richmond Camp, No. 11622 Modern Woodmen of America, will be fully equipped with new uniforms according to decision reached at the meeting of the camp held in Redmen's hall last night and presided over by Al English, venerable consul. The ball club has been going strong this season, so it was decided that they deserve new suits. On next Sunday morning the team will cross bats with the Conn Drug company aggregation at the Twenty-third street diamond. The druggists have not tasted defeat so far this year, but after this game one of these clubs will of necessity have one game marked on the left side of the ledger.

The Woodmen have accepted an invitation of the Veterans of Foreign Wars to participate in the parade on June 25, in connection with the encampment at that time.

Church Advances

Mary's Church, a delightful church, had a very successful service at the Y. M. C. A. on the 10th of June, with a band of 20 girls last night, by dedicating the new Y. M. C. A. building. The girls were led by Robert "Mickie" Chambers, 14, and handpicked. Hill vs. Stearns, with a 2 straight but fast game by 2-11 point handicap on Hill.

21-8 scores. Although Charles, who had no worry about the game, at any time, was very much worried with the game. The remainder of the crowd found round, and semi-finals of the tournament. The tournament was played on the 10th of June, with a band of 20 girls last night, by dedicating the new Y. M. C. A. building. The girls were led by Robert "Mickie" Chambers, 14, and handpicked. Hill vs. Stearns, with a 2 straight but fast game by 2-11 point handicap on Hill.

TUBERCULOSIS OVERCOME

Oakland, Calif.
April 28, 1925.
For about three years I suffered from a bad cough and sore chest. I tried many doctors, all of whom pronounced my case Tuberculosis. My spittle was examined and showed tubercular germs. As I found no improvement from any of the treatments that I took, I decided to give the FONG WAN HERB a test, as a last resort.

After having drunk the herbs for four months, I was a well woman and had gained in weight. A year has elapsed since I began to take the FONG WAN HERB and on April 16, 1925, but today, I am still well and have no sign of my former complaints.

RICHMOND AIR MEET IS WELL ADVERTISED

held here June 27 and 28 is being advertised in San Francisco by means of a huge sign of 50 by 4 1-2 foot dimensions over the canopy of the emporium. The unusual favor in permitting the erection of the sign was granted to the Richmond Chamber of Commerce by C. S. Spear, president of the state board of harbor commissioners. The sign is being painted by J. S. Bowen and will attract the attention of the 100,000 persons who pass through the ferry building daily.

As a further means of advertising the circus, tickers will be placed on street cars today, and both the Southern Pacific and Key Route ferries are placarded with the sign. It is understood that the Santa F. will put posters in all stations in the state. Signs are also being distributed along the highways.

Parade To Be

Memorial hall by writing or telephoning Richmond 465.

PARADE BIG FEATURE.

The Richmond Chamber of Commerce has invited the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the delegates and visitors to witness the Richmond Air congress at the Air field on Saturday afternoon, June 27 and Saturday June 28. The invitation has been accepted and this event will wind up the encampment here.

One of the big features of the encampment is the parade to be held on June 25. All veteran organizations in the city, as well as numerous civic organizations and lodges have signified their intention of participating. The parade will start at First street and break up at Twenty-third. A fifty-piece band, a band of the Oakland Sons of St. George, and a drum corps from Oakland and one from Sacramento will furnish music for the parade.

Another of the main features will be the Fifth Encampment Grand Military Ball at Memorial hall on Friday night June 26. Everything is being done to make this affair a great success and the committee in charge is confident that it will surpass all previous affairs of this nature heretofore held in Richmond.

TENTATIVE PROGRAM.

The program of the convention has been unofficially announced as follows:

Wednesday, June 24 Evening. Informal dance at Memorial hall for all visitors and delegates who are at that time in the city.

Thursday, June 25, 10 a. m. Opening session and the seating of delegates.

2 p. m. Opening ceremonies. Welcoming addresses by the city officials and prominent citizens.

7 p. m. Parade from First to Twenty-third street.

8 p. m. Buffet luncheon served by the Ladies Auxiliary to the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

8:30 Entertainment for delegates and visitors in the auditorium of Memorial hall.

11:30 The "Big Scratch" of the Cookies at the opening of their convention. The nature of the Big Scratch has not been divulged.

Friday, June 26, 10 a. m. Business session.

12 to 2 p. m. Visit of delegates and visitors to the Standard Oil refinery. Cars to be furnished by the Elks lodge, Chamber of Commerce and the Merchants' association.

2:30 p. m. Business session.

7 p. m. Banquet in Memorial hall banquet room.

8:30 p. m. Fifth Encampment Grand Military Ball.

Saturday, June 27, 10 a. m. Final business session.

Afternoon. Visit to the Richmond Air Congress at the Richmond Air Field.

Grass Valley

Tup into the tunnel have failed, as the unexplained side movement of earth and stones which resulted in the cave-in have apparently disconnected the rails somewhere under the debris. Dr. Carl J. Jones of Grass Valley used a stethoscope with a diaphragm attachment on the rails today without avail.

As rescue work progresses, however, a long pipe is being thrust at intervals through the debris with a stethoscope attached to one end, in hopes that the other end will reach the rock chamber permitting a signal from Hill.

SUFFICIENT AIR.

Though the imprisoned miner is without food, mine officials expressed confidence that there is sufficient air in the tunnel to sustain life for from eight to ten days, ample time, they say for a rescue.

As the crews digging in the muck continued through the night, it became apparent that the air compressor pipelines, as well as the car rails, have been broken and wrecked from position.

TO VISIT SANTA ROSA

Bert A. Bussow, popular young gentleman of this city, is planning on sojourning in Santa Rosa over the week-end. Mr. Bussow's parents reside in Santa Rosa, but he is connected with the Standard Oil company in Richmond.

Mrs. Hill, wife of the entrapped man and three children, the oldest 15, continued hopefully on watch at the Baltic tunnel mouth. She bore up bravely under the strain of her second night's vigil and continued her optimistic belief that her husband will be saved.

The Baltic tunnel is located on Squirrel Creek, about three miles west of Grass Valley. Originally a hydraulic property, it has been owned by the Alta Combination Mines Company for the last fifty years.

LIQUOR CASE DISMISSED

The case against Andrew Branca of San Pablo, charged with illegal possession of intoxicating liquor was dismissed by Justice of the Peace Frank L. Glass, Thursday, on motion of the District Attorney for lack of evidence connecting Branca with the ownership of a small quantity of liquor that officers claimed to have found on his premises.
